A Word from the Chief Building Official

Considering installing or having installed a free-standing Tower on your property?

What you need to know...

- A building permit is required for the construction of a tower.
- Complete plans and specifications, engineered drawings and a site plan are required to be included in the permit application.
- The zoning setbacks from property lines apply to tower location on the lot.
- An inspection by your local building official of the footing excavation and forming, before concrete is poured, is required to ensure compliance with the engineered drawings.

Please note that no work is to commence until the building permit is issued. There may be liability concerns as to who is responsible if a tower should collapse and cause damage or injury, check with your insurance provider. Contact your municipal building department if you have any questions to ensure the construction process is followed.

Planning on Building? When is a Permit Required?

Any new building over 108 ft<sup>2</sup> (9 x 12) including garages, decks, and porches. If a building is less than 108 ft<sup>2</sup> (9 x 12) it must still meet the zoning and all setback requirements for the property. Any addition to an existing building including porches or decks. Any extensive renovations that would include structural alterations. Demolition of any building. All sewage systems. Partitioning and finishing a basement. Damp proofing or waterproofing foundation walls, including installation of drainage tile.
